JetBlue Cancels All Departures from JFK as Northeast Winter Storm Deepens; Airline Waives Change Fees and Fare Charges for Customers Booked On Flights Through Wednesday, February 19
NEW YORK, Feb 17, 2002 (BUSINESS WIRE) -- With the continued severe winter storm conditions in the Northeast, JetBlue Airways (Nasdaq:JBLU) has cancelled all flight departures from John F. Kennedy International Airport (JFK) in New York City for the remainder of today, Monday, February 17.

Based on current forecasts, JetBlue still plans, however, to operate some late evening flight arrivals into JFK. Up to 30 inches of snow is expected to accumulate at JFK airport throughout this afternoon, and road access to the airport has been severely impacted by the ongoing storm.

JetBlue is making every effort to contact and reaccomodate customers on all cancelled flights. In addition, the airline will waive all change fees and any potential fare increases for customers booked on JetBlue flights to/from JFK through Wednesday, February 19.

JetBlue customers are encouraged to check the status of their flights online at www.jetblue.com or by calling 1-800-JETBLUE. Further updates will be issued as new weather information becomes available.
