American Airlines Receives Silver Award from the National Business Group on Health

9/19/2019

FORT WORTH, Texas — Cue your most inspirational workout playlist: American Airlines was named one of the best 50 U.S. employers for its well-being strategy to improve employee health and productivity and business performance. The National Business Group on Health's Best Employers: Excellence in Health & Well-being award recognizes employers with the best workforce well-being initiatives in the U.S., particularly those with a holistic approach to well-being, encompassing financial, emotional, social and community wellness.

"Caring for our team is at the heart of every decision we make," said Neisha Strambler-Butler, American's Vice President of Compensation and Benefits. "From a health and wellness perspective, that means providing an array of programs to help our team members stay healthy in all the ways that matter to them. This award recognizes that commitment and keeps pushing us forward."

The National Business Group on Health is the only nonprofit organization devoted exclusively to representing large employers' perspective on health policy issues and optimizing workforce strategy through innovative health, benefits and well-being solutions.
