

Whirlpool Corporation's David Szczupak to Present at EE Global 2010

Exploring the interdependence of electric vehicles and smart appliances

WASHINGTON, May 7, 2010 /PRNewswire via COMTEX/ --David Szczupak, executive vice president of the global product organization for Whirlpool Corporation, will present "Why You Need a Smart Dishwasher to Drive an Electric Car" at the 8:30 a.m. May 11, Morning Plenary Session of the Energy Efficiency Global Forum & Exposition (EE Global).

Hosted in Washington, D.C., May 10-12, by the Alliance to Save Energy, EE Global convenes world-class business, technology, government and policy leaders to address the latest technological breakthroughs, policy advances and research related to energy efficiency.

"We are delighted to welcome Mr. Szczupak to the world's premier dialogue on energy efficiency and clean energy," said Kateri Callahan, president of the Alliance. "As a prominent voice in the industry, he will be a valuable contributor to the conference.

Szczupak will join the more than 50 energy experts from around the world to address four plenary sessions and four concurrent tracks of Executive Dialogue sessions. Each track concentrates on one of four key energy end-use sectors: buildings, consumers, industry and utilities or transportation and urban planning.

High-level public speakers include Assistant Secretary for Energy Efficiency and Renewable Energy Cathy Zoi; Federal Energy Regulatory Commissioner Jon Wellinghoff; and European Parliament Member Lena Ek of Sweden. For a list of all confirmed speakers, go to <http://eeglobalforum.org/symposium-confirmed-speakers.php>.

The three-day event is expected to draw more than 1,000 attendees, exhibitors, speakers and media. For additional information, please visit <http://www.eeglobalforum.org/>.
