"The Ocean Tomo 300 list validates the value of intellectual capital and innovation," said Jeff M. Fettig, Whirlpool Corporation's chairman and CEO. "On the eve of our 100th Anniversary celebration kickoff, we're especially pleased that our long-term strategic commitment to delivering innovations consumers desire through our unmatched portfolio of brands is again being acknowledged. Our consistent efforts to produce intellectual property that help improve consumers' homes and lives will help ensure that we continue to deliver positive results for our shareholders."

The Ocean Tomo 300 Patent Index™ is the first major broad-based market equity to be launched in 35 years, and follows the progression from the Dow Jones Industrial Average in 1896, to Standard & Poor's 500 in 1957 and then to the NASDAQ Composite Index in 1971. The Index represents 300 companies that own the most valuable patents relative to their book value and will focus investors on intellectual property as a distinct asset class.
