Emmy Award nominee and writer, producer, and star honors healthcare workers with exclusive scrubwear company design that brings purpose-driven fashion to the red carpet

SANTA MONICA, Calif.--(BUSINESS WIRE)-- Noah Wyle, star of medical drama The Pitt and Emmy nominee at the 77th Emmy Awards, is making fashion history on the red carpet wearing the first-ever tuxedo designed by a scrubwear company. The custom creation by healthcare apparel company, FIGS, merges television's biggest stage with a deeply meaningful and personal tribute to healthcare workers.

The custom Black Tie Scrubs worn by Noah Wyle are designed in Midnight Blue to feel clean, classic, and sleek. The dress shirt features a powerful detail: "Awesome Human" is embroidered on the inner collar stand, a personal tribute that reinforces the garment's deeper meaning. The phrase echoes FIGS' official brand slogan, "Awesome Humans Wear FIGS," which celebrates the healthcare professionals the company serves. This is a one-of-a-kind FIGS tuxedo designed exclusively for the 77th Emmy Awards and will not be available for purchase.

"Tonight, Noah is proving that the healthcare community deserves a seat at every table, including television's biggest night," said Trina Spear, FIGS' CEO and Co-Founder. "By honoring healthcare workers, Noah's commitment to authentically representing these extraordinary individuals on the red carpet embodies everything FIGS stands for. We are honored to create this one-of-a-kind piece that celebrates all healthcare workers off the screen. We thank Noah for championing healthcare workers and their stories through his art."

This moment builds on Noah's relationship with FIGS, following his impactful June visit to Capitol Hill alongside real frontline healthcare professionals to lobby for critical healthcare worker legislation.
