

Regions Debit, Credit and Now Cards Are Available for Use with Android Pay

Sep 11, 2015

New Payment App will be Available in Google Play Store in the next few days

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.--(BUSINESS WIRE)-- Regions Bank customers can soon add their Regions Debit, Credit and Prepaid Now cards to Android Pay, the simple and secure way to pay with your Android phone.

Android Pay enables Android users to seamlessly tap and pay with their phones at more than 1 million stores across the US, with more locations being added every day, and to make those purchases easily and securely. Regions customers can use this new payment product to load an existing Regions card to Android Pay and use those cards to make purchases in stores that accept contactless payments.

Android Pay is supported by industry standard tokenization, which does not transmit actual credit or debit card numbers with a payment. Instead, a virtual account number is used to represent the customer's account information—providing an enhanced layer of security. Additional security features also include payment confirmations and the Android Device Manager, which allows users to lock a device remotely, secure it with a new password or wipe it clean of personal information if the phone is ever stolen or lost.

"Regions was one of the first banks in the nation to be announced as a participant in this service. This is another step forward in enabling our customers to manage their finances when and where they choose," said Scott Peters, head of Regions Consumer Services.

"We're excited to bring the simplicity and security of mobile payments to Regions customers with Android Pay. With Android Pay, people will be able to use their Android device to pay at more than one million stores in the US and we're adding more every day," said Pali Bhat, Director, Product Management, Google.

Android Pay will be available for download on Google Play in the next few days, and will come pre-installed on new NFC-enabled Android phones from major carriers.
