“Since joining Regions in 2017, Elizabeth has provided a wealth of policy expertise on a variety of financial services matters,” said Plimpton. “She has an outstanding reputation for working collaboratively with many stakeholders, and I’m pleased to have a leader of her caliber representing Regions in Washington and throughout the communities that our customers and associates call home.”

Taylor most recently served as head of Regulatory Policy and Assistant General Counsel in Regions’ Washington, D.C., office. Before joining Regions, she was Chief Legal Officer and Chief of Staff for the International Franchise Association. She previously worked in the United States Senate, including as chief counsel to three different senators on the Senate Judiciary Committee and as chief counsel for the ranking member of the Privacy, Technology and the Law subcommittee. She earned a Juris Doctorate from American University, Washington College of Law, and a Bachelor of Arts from Rhodes College.
