JetBlue Airways Celebrates the Opening of its Orlando Training Center

MEDIA ADVISORY, June 2, 2005 (PRIMEZONE) --

WHAT: The Honorable Jeb Bush will join JetBlue Airways' Chairman and CEO, David Neeleman and JetBlue President and COO, Dave Barger for a special ribbon-cutting ceremony in celebration of the airline's new training facility. The new training center further strengthens JetBlue's commitment to building its presence in Florida. JetBlue University's Orlando Support Campus will offer initial and recurrent training for its Flight Operations, Inflight, Technical Operations and Customer Service areas.

The training center originally broke ground on May 27, 2004, and contains approximately 107,000 square feet that includes an auditorium, classrooms, briefing rooms, offices and an outdoor training pool. Additionally, the facility currently holds four Airbus A320 full-flight simulators and one Embraer E190 simulator. A second E190 simulator will be installed in August and future growth could provide spacing for up to 12 full-flight simulators. There will also be two cabin trainers, one for each aircraft type, which will be used as the cornerstone for JetBlue's industry-leading approach to Flight Attendant training and certification.

The facilities were constructed by Suitt Construction Company, with BRPH Architects and Engineers as the design architect. The Planning Architect/Engineer was Rubin and Rotman, Associates and Tishman Construction Corporation served as owner's representative.

On April 26, JetBlue opened its $24 million LiveTV hangar facility 2,000 feet from the training center, and on June 21, the airline will celebrate five years of service at Orlando International Airport.
