Statement by JetBlue CEO David Neeleman Regarding Flight 292

NEW YORK, Sept. 22, 2005 (PRIMEZONE) -- JetBlue Airways' Chief Executive Officer David Neeleman today issued the following statement regarding the emergency landing of Flight 292 in Los Angeles yesterday:

"On behalf of JetBlue's 9,000 crewmembers, I would like to express my personal admiration and deep appreciation to the pilots and flight attendants of Flight 292 for their professionalism and skill in handling yesterday's incident.

"I would also like to thank the thousands of customers and business partners who took the time to acknowledge the crew for taking care of our customers on board the flight and for what many have described as a perfectly executed emergency landing.

"We continue to offer support to customers from Flight 292, including securing travel arrangements and any other assistance they require.

"The crew of Flight 292 has asked us to communicate their appreciation to the 140 customers on board for their cooperation, and they are also grateful for the messages of support sent to JetBlue by thousands of people. The crew looks forward to returning to their families and loved ones, and to their normal lives as quickly as possible.

"I join all JetBlue crewmembers in thanking Los Angeles International Airport, the Federal Aviation Administration and local authorities for their assistance in the successful outcome of this incident."

The National Transportation Safety Board (the independent Federal agency charged by Congress to investigate civil aviation accidents or incidents in the United States) will field all further questions regarding the investigation of Flight 292.
