NEW YORK, NY -- (Marketwired) -- 05/19/15 -- JetBlue Airways (NASDAQ: JBLU) today announced plans for two new routes that will grow its presence in the Baltimore-Washington and Philadelphia metropolitan areas and continue its expansion in its focus cities in Orlando and Fort Lauderdale-Hollywood.

Beginning November 12, JetBlue will operate new once daily service between Baltimore-Washington International Thurgood Marshall Airport (BWI) and Orlando International Airport (MCO) -- the same day JetBlue launches previously announced service between Baltimore and Fort Lauderdale-Hollywood. Within the National Capital Region, JetBlue also operates flights out of Ronald Reagan Washington National Airport (DCA) and Washington Dulles International Airport (IAD).

Beginning November 19, JetBlue will operate twice daily service between Philadelphia (PHL) and Fort Lauderdale-Hollywood (FLL). "We thought it was time to bring a little humanity back to air travel in Baltimore and Philadelphia, where customers deserve a better experience at a low price," said Scott Laurence, senior vice president airline planning, JetBlue. "No more cattle car boarding. Customers will love stepping on our flights knowing they have an assigned seat with the most legroom in coach*, all the brand name snacks they can eat, and live television to sit back and enjoy the ride without distraction. Whether traveling to Florida or continuing on to one of our many Latin American and Caribbean destinations, our award-winning service and friendly crewmembers will make JetBlue the best flight in town."

JetBlue is offering an introductory fare of only $49 one way (a) from Baltimore-Washington to Orlando and from Philadelphia to Fort Lauderdale-Hollywood available on May 19, 2015. All introductory fare tickets must be purchased before May 20, 2015.
