JetBlue Appoints Ramki Ramaswamy Vice President, IT Technology & Integration

Feb 06, 2017

NEW YORK--(BUSINESS WIRE)-- JetBlue (Nasdaq:JBLU), New York's Hometown Airline®, today announced the appointment of Ramki Ramaswamy as the carrier's new Vice President, IT Technology & Integration, effective immediately. Ramaswamy joins JetBlue to oversee the Data Services, Application Development & Quality Assurance functions. He will report to Eash Sundaram, JetBlue's Executive Vice President, Chief Information Officer.

Ramaswamy comes to JetBlue from J.D. Power, where he served as Vice President Application Development since 2012. Prior to J.D. Power, he was Senior Director of Application Development at Standard & Poor's.

"We are pleased to welcome Ramki to lead our data, development and QA teams," said Sundaram. "Ramki's extensive professional background in technology coupled with his focus on agile development is a great addition to the senior leadership team."

"I'm excited to join an innovative company like JetBlue that is broadly recognized for its culture and technological advancements," added Ramaswamy. "I am honored to be leading a talented team of technology professionals."
