FORT WORTH, Texas — Whether it's checking travel guidelines or taking a preflight coronavirus (COVID-19) test, planning travel looks a bit different these days. To help ease the travel experience, American Airlines continues to find ways to provide more flexibility and choices for customers throughout their journey.

Starting Feb. 25, AAdvantage® members can redeem miles to order an at-home COVID-19 testing kit through LetsGetChecked, one of American's testing partners. The pre-flight testing program covers nine countries and any U.S. city, state or territory that has COVID-19 travel restrictions.

American's partnership with LetsGetChecked started in September 2020 as part of an ongoing effort to help protect customer health and safety, inspire confidence in air travel and advance the industry's recovery from the COVID-19 pandemic. This edition of American Minute explains how at-home testing works.

To request a testing kit, members can call AAdvantage Customer Service at 800-882-8880 and redeem 12,000 miles. In order to receive results in time for travel, kits must be requested at least 10 business days before departure. Not

To add a hint of luxury to the experience or to simply feel more comfortable along the way, there are several other ways members can redeem AAdvantage miles:

- American's Five Star Service helps ease the travel experience with dedicated and personalized assistance every step of the journey, including access to the Admirals Club (where available).
- Upgrades to First and Business class can be confirmed with miles, and members can reserve Preferred and Main Cabin Extra seats with miles on most fares – simply check the seat map to see options after booking a trip.
- As always, AAdvantage members can redeem miles for car rentals, hotel reservations and American Airlines Vacations packages, too.

ENHANCED VERIFLY MOBILE
HEALTH PASSPORT CAPABILITIES

Beginning Friday, Feb. 26, American customers will be able to access VeriFLY's new multi-passenger authentication capabilities. This enhancement will allow one VeriFLY user to store passes for a multi-passenger itinerary on one device, further streamlining the check-in process for passengers traveling together. In addition, the app will display a new user interface that helps users navigate the app more easily.

These new features will be available for all inbound travel to the United States from international origins from which American flies and will expand in the weeks to come for all routes on which VeriFLY is available with the airline. VeriFLY is the first operational mobile health passport to offer multi-pass functionality on supported flights in 55 countries across six continents.

Today, travelers can use VeriFLY for testing and document verification when traveling from all of American's domestic airports to nine countries and most of American's international flights to the United States. More information is available on the COVID-19 testing page.
