American Airlines celebrates renewed partnership with National Park Foundation during Earth Month

Living Green members supported environmental conservation efforts by clearing trails and marking delineations at Joshua Tree National Park earlier this year.

American Airlines is proud to renew its partnership with the National Park Foundation (NPF), reinforcing its dedication to preserving America's national parks and encouraging exploration of the country's iconic natural wonders, historic sites and cultural treasures.

As NPF's first official airline partner, American helps connect travelers with the beauty and history of America's parks.

American's Living Green Employee Business Resource Group (EBRG), formed in 2012, is another key part of the airline's sustainability efforts. With nearly 1,900 team members across 10 global chapters, Living Green focuses on reducing environmental impact and supporting conservation initiatives at American.

In recent years, members have volunteered at Mount Rainier, Great Smoky Mountains, Grand Teton and Joshua Tree National Parks, along with participating in events like the Annual Pullman National Monument Clean-Up and launching recycle and reuse events across our stations.

In celebration of Earth Month, American invites AAdvantage® members to donate miles to Miles for Our Planet, with all donations directed to the National Park Foundation throughout April. This initiative supports the preservation of national parks and inspires future generations to connect with these iconic landscapes.

American Airlines offers more than 500 flights to national parks across the U.S., from Joshua Tree to the Grand Canyon to Glacier National Park. Ready to explore? Check out our Flights to National Parks for more information.
