First Class favorites take flight: American Airlines brings light bites to the menu between Chicago and New York

2026-11-11

FORT WORTH, Texas — American Airlines is expanding dining choices for premium customers with new light bites offered in First Class on select flights. Beginning this month, customers traveling in First Class on flights between Chicago O'Hare International Airport (ORD) and John F. Kennedy International Airport (JFK) or LaGuardia Airport (LGA) in New York will enjoy a selection of light morning and afternoon offerings designed for customers looking for fresh, flavorful meal choices.

Customers can choose from two light bite options, with menus rotating regularly throughout the year to provide customers with variety and choice.

"Our light bites menu provides an elevated experience on one of our most popular routes," said Vice President of Culinary Strategy and Operations Raphael Girardoni. "We want to exceed the expectations of even our most discerning customers, and this new, more substantial menu offering is designed to do just that."

Continuing to elevate the inflight dining experience

In recent months, American has continued to elevate the customer dining experience across the travel journey. The airline introduced a refreshed lineup of complimentary Main Cabin snacks, expanded its popular partnership with Pecan Lodge to all eligible First Class flights departing from Dallas Fort Worth International Airport (DFW), reopened its redesigned Flagship® Dining at Los Angeles International Airport (LAX), and enhanced food and beverage offerings across its Flagship® and Admirals Club® lounges. Together with ongoing investments in premium dining, lounges and onboard service, these enhancements reflect American's commitment to delivering a more thoughtful, elevated travel experience for customers at every stage of their journey.
