Explore new fairways: American Airlines gives golfers more ways to get to their favorite links

2025-03-20

Warm weather and freshly cut greens signal the start of golf season, and American Airlines is giving golfers a chance to score a hole-in-one with ideal itineraries for the perfect golf trip. From Scotland to Georgia and more, American has the flights golfers need to connect them to the opening hole.

More ways to the action in Augusta

Between April 6 and 14, American will offer the most flights and the most seats of any airline to Augusta Regional Airport (AGS). With up to 22 round-trip flights per day, American will offer customers the most convenient schedules from across the country to golf's biggest tournament.

American will offer travelers more ways to customize their journey with more than 3,800 premium cabin seats available during the tournament, more than any other airline. Customers traveling in premium cabins can enjoy benefits such as complimentary baggage and enhanced food and beverage options.

Swing your way around the globe

For golfers looking to take in rich history and stunning landscapes in the birthplace of golf, American's seasonal flights to Edinburgh, Scotland (EDI), take off starting May 23. Home to more than 550 golf courses, Scotland is a bucket list destination for all kinds of golf vacations.

Nearby in Ireland, American's up-to-four daily flights to Dublin (DUB) give golfers convenient access to scenic courses along the coast, giving travelers the chance to swing the perfect shot while taking pictures in the perfect spot.

Across the Pacific, the diverse courses from Japan to Australia and New Zealand are easily accessible through American and its partners. Whether heading to courses near Melbourne, scoring eagles across the South Island of New Zealand or playing a leisurely round with the majestic Mt. Fuji in the background, traveling with American and its partners is easier as a member of the AAdvantage® program. Not a member?
