Forever Forward at DFW: A global gateway for commerce, connectivity and opportunity

2026-11-19

In the latest episode of Forever Forward℠ at DFW, Dr. Travis Tokar, professor of Supply Chain Management at the Texas Christian University (TCU) Center for Supply Chain Innovation in the Neeley School of Business, discusses the critical role American — through its largest hub at Dallas Fort Worth International Airport (DFW) — plays in powering North Texas' economy.

Accounting for about $70 billion in total economic activity and 350,000 jobs, American's DFW hub enables a scale of air service and connectivity that far exceeds what local demand alone could support, helping businesses reach customers, attract talent, access global markets and compete more effectively. And with continued enhancements, expansions and investments coming to life across DFW Airport, American's impact on the region is only expected to grow.

Dive deeper into TCU's study and American's outsized impact on North Texas.

Forever Forward℠ at DFW is American's new shortform video series that takes viewers behind the scenes of the multiyear modernization across DFW. As American's hometown airport and largest hub, DFW hosts more passengers than any other airport in the airline's network. American is investing billions of dollars to modernize and strengthen its flagship hub, delivering a much smoother experience for our customers and team members, providing more certainty with their schedules and connections and improving DFW's resilience to handle severe weather and other disruptions.

Forever Forward℠ at DFW showcases the exciting updates customers will see over the next several years and is part of American's long-standing commitment to Texas and the many communities in the airline's network, bringing customers along as milestones land.
