Winter Storm Hernando: American resumes Northeast operations, adds 4,000 seats for customers

2026-02-24

American Airlines is resuming operations throughout the Northeast following Winter Storm Hernando, which brought more than 2 feet of snow to many areas.

American resumed flights at John F. Kennedy International Airport (JFK) and LaGuardia Airport (LGA) at noon ET today, and at Boston Logan International Airport (BOS) at 1 p.m. ET today. Other airports throughout the Northeast will also restart operations, including Rhode Island T.F. Green International Airport (PVD) in Providence, which received nearly 3 feet of snow. Operations resumed at Reagan National Airport (DCA) Monday morning, with flights resuming Monday afternoon at Philadelphia International Airport (PHL).

To help get customers to and from the Northeast, American has added extra flights — totaling more than 4,000 seats — including flights operated by some of American’s largest aircraft. The schedule is as follows, as of 2 p.m. ET on Feb. 24:
